Preschool teachers will be in greater demand as awareness grows around the importance of early childhood education for a child’s short- and long-term intellectual and social development. In addition, the number of students enrolling in kindergarten and elementary schools is expected to increase over the coming decade. Therefore, more teachers will be required to teach these additional classes of students.

Finally, employment growth in human and family services is projected due to a rising demand for health care and social services.